TOO MANY LEFT BEHIND

In 2015, more than half the population or 55.1 per cent was living below the poverty line. The poverty rate is generally higher in rural areas (68.7 per cent on average). Primary vulnerability factors are food insecurity, insufficient access to health care and unemployment or underemployment particularly prevalent among youth.

The current social protection system in Togo is characterized by limited coverage and a low level of public spending. Statutory social protection schemes are largely restricted to workers employed in the formal sector; the social health insurance scheme is accessible only by civil servants. This gap is particularly acute among the elderly population, with only 9 per cent of people aged 65 and over receiving a pension (ILO, 2015).

Social protection for vulnerable population is largely ensured by cash transfer projects whose scope and duration are limited and primarily funded by development aid. In addition, opportunities to participate in social insurance schemes are limited to people with sufficient income to do so.

The Government of Togo is determined to improve the socio-economic performance of the country. In continuity of the recently adopted National Development Plan 2018-22, the country is now finalizing its national social protection policy with a vision to "protect all population in Togo against vulnerabilities and social risks by implementing a social protection system based on solidarity, equity and rights", for adoption by December 2018.

The ILO is supporting Togo to move forward with this ambition. To help finalise the national social protection policy, in partnership with the OECD, the ILO has completed a comprehensive review of the situation using the inter-agency "Social Protection Policy Options Tool" (SPPOT). The results permitted the selection of policy options for social protection extension in the country, namely on universal health care, extended contributory schemes, integrated social assistance system and increased employability and decent employment. The exercise also established specific actions to strengthen the institutional and legal framework and to identify sustainable funding mechanisms.

Economic and social inclusion is the main driver for social cohesion: health insurance coverage will be extended in the course of the next five years. The Government will amplify the scope of cash transfer programmes. The school-feeding scheme will be extended towards national coverage.
